

Individual Reflection

Week 7

Malin Rosén

We went into this week knowing that our team members from I had their kandidatarbete coming up, and that they wouldn't have much time to work on the project. Us remaining members tried to fix this by working more, which was probably not the best way to do it. What I will take with me to other projects is that sometimes unexpected things happen, and you have to plan around it instead of just working harder. That way you can keep a good pace, and not get more stressed.

I have realized that I probably can help my team more in my role as scrum master, but since I find it very challenging to actually understand what I should do, it's hard. What I need to work on is just taking some more initiative and action. This will hopefully make me more comfortable in the role.

As I've stated most weeks; I've helped with the team reflection. I still think the group communicates well when we do this. This week was a bit of a struggle though, since the members from I had their kandidat. This led to the team reflection being handed in a bit late, since we wanted everyone to read it through and be happy with it.
